Crockin writes with a candor and vulnerability that is both heartbreaking and inspiring. She shares her deepest fears and doubts, as well as her moments of hope and resilience. Through it all, she never loses sight of her dream of becoming a mother.

Traveling The Terrain is not just a story of infertility. It is also a story of love, loss, and the power of the human spirit. Crockin's journey is one that will resonate with anyone who has ever faced a major challenge in their life.

An Excerpt from Traveling The Terrain

"I remember the day we got the diagnosis. We were sitting in the doctor's office, holding hands, and waiting for the results of our fertility tests. When the doctor came in, she sat down and took a deep breath. 'I'm so sorry,' she said. 'You have unexplained infertility.'"

"I felt like the world had been sucked out from under me. I couldn't breathe. I couldn't speak. I just sat there, staring at the doctor, trying to process what she had said."

"After a few minutes, I finally found my voice. 'What does this mean?' I asked.

"'It means that you and your husband have a very low chance of conceiving a child naturally,' the doctor said. 'We can try some treatments, but there's no guarantee that they will work.'"

"I nodded, but I didn't really hear what she was saying. I was too busy trying to wrap my head around the fact that I might never be a mother."
